Welcome to Denmark's pig production system – and to Denmark

On behalf of the entire Danish pig production system, I would like to begin by thanking you for choosing to join our ranks.

Daily routines in the system are vastly different from one farm to another. But no matter where you have gotten a job, I am sure that your employer and co-workers will follow the industry's common goals: to produce world-class pork for customers in Denmark and abroad.

We have a product we have a right to be proud of. And it all starts in the pig house with you and your co-workers.

Get off to a good start

You will be learning many new routines and tasks in your new job. This is why you will be thoroughly trained once you start working in the pig house. This training will ensure that we also have an efficient production process going forward that ultimately produces a product that is in great demand.

To ensure this requires us to continue to have a high level of animal well-being, minimise the use of medicine, keep disease out of Denmark, and more. In this context, the African swine fever virus is a particular threat right now to Denmark's pig production. This folder contains a number of guidelines in several different languages for how to protect against infection, handle sick and injured pigs, etc.

You can also take a free online course on www.SEGES.dk. The course is available in English, Ukrainian and Romanian.

There is a great need to have qualified employees in Denmark's pig production. Therefore, I hope you will be pleased with your new job in Denmark.

Kind regards,
Erik Larsen
